Willingness to Attend:
Which Audiences are Ready to Return
The first wave of the COVID-19 Cultural Participation Monitor (fieldwork: late Oct/early Nov 2020) included the following question:

In terms of Covid-19 safety, which best describes your attitude to attending…?

- I am happy to attend right now if there was something I wanted to see or do
- I would consider attending, but with some reservations
- I am not comfortable with this at the moment
- I'm not interested in doing this

This was asked in relation to events in outdoor spaces, seated indoor spaces and non-seated indoor spaces.
The following analysis looks at the differing proportions who said:

- I am happy to attend right now if there was something I wanted to see or do

By splits of:

- Age
- Ethnicity
- Region
- Audience Spectrum type.

We also compared this to the proportion of each group which said that they had already booked or were interested in booking for any art form/sector.
What We Found: Age

Younger audiences were more likely to be happy to attend all three types of venue.
What We Found: Age

Younger audiences were more likely to be happy to attend all three types of venue.
What We Found: Age

Younger audiences were also more likely to have booked already.
What We Found: Ethnicity

White audiences were more likely to be happy to attend all three types of venue.

Asian/Asian British and Black/Black British audiences were particularly hesitant about events in outdoor settings.
What We Found: Ethnicity

White audiences were more likely to be happy to attend all three types of venue.

Asian/Asian British and Black/Black British audiences were particularly hesitant about events in outdoor settings.
What We Found: Ethnicity

There was, however, little difference in the proportions who had booked or were interested in booking by ethnicity, with White respondents if anything less likely.
What We Found: Region or Nation

English audiences were more likely to be happy to attend all three types of venue. Audiences in Scotland, Wales and - especially - Northern Ireland were much more reluctant.
What We Found: Region or Nation

English audiences were more likely to be happy to attend all three types of venue.

Audiences in Scotland, Wales and - especially - Northern Ireland were much more reluctant.
What We Found: Region or Nation

London and South East audiences were most likely to have booked or be interested in booking.

Audiences in Wales in particular were less likely.

What We Found: Audience Spectrum

Metroculturals are particularly ready to attend. Commuterland Culturebuffs are more reluctant, for indoor events.
What We Found: Audience Spectrum

Metroculturals are particularly likely to have booked or be interested.

Heydays and Home & Heritage are least likely, but Commuterland Culturebuffs are below the other highly engaged segments.
In Summary

Audiences were more likely to be happy to attend now if they were:

- Younger
- White
- English
- Metrocultural

Audiences were less likely to be happy to attend now if they were:

- Older
- Asian/Asian British or Black/Black British - esp. for outdoor events
- In Scotland, Wales or esp. Northern Ireland
- Commuterland Culturebuffs (for indoor events)
In Summary

Audiences were more likely to have already booked or be interested in booking if they were:

- Younger
- White
- From London and the South East
- Metroculturals

Audiences were less likely to have already booked or be interested in booking if they were:

- Older
- In Wales
- Heydays and Home & Heritage
Implications

- This analysis suggests that the return of audiences is likely to be earlier for those who are younger and metropolitan, esp. in London and the South East, with notable reluctance from Heydays, Home & Heritage and Commuterland Culturebuffs.

- This matches the groups who returned between lockdowns*.

- This could mean that there is an aggregate shift toward more experimental, varied and contemporary artforms, and away from more traditional work.

- It may also indicate that audiences are slower to return in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, which may require additional support for cultural infrastructure from the devolved administrations.
